D.W. MORGAN EXPANDS 'SUPPLY ON DEMAND' OPERATIONS IN THAILAND

Supply chain and logistics firm establishes operations in Laem Chabang

PLEASANTON, Calif., February 25, 2010 — The D.W. Morgan Company has expanded its on-the-ground presence in Asia by launching dedicated trucking operations in Laem Chabang, Thailand.

The local trucking operation connects factories in this manufacturing and seaport city to local warehouses. They also provide a link to Bangkok and other, international destinations.

"These new operations support our strategy to be on the ground and active in every key manufacturing site around the globe," said David W. Morgan, CEO and founder of D.W. Morgan Company. "We solve the world's 'last mile' supply chain problem: By investing in identical equipment, warehousing, processes and technology, we're able to provide the same high levels of execution and visibility everywhere our clients are making and distributing goods."

All Morgan drivers worldwide, for instance, use Morgan's proprietary ChainLinq™ Mobile application for iPhone in order to post instant delivery verification online. Customers can view digital signatures, see a satellite map of exactly where the goods were delivered—even review live photos of the delivery.

Morgan's newest trucking investment in Thailand builds on similar commitments in other major manufacturing locations, including Mexico, Malaysia, mainland China and the U.S.
