

last mile advantage

When it comes to global manufacturing and distribution, the last mile of the supply chain can be the hardest. Morgan has on-the-ground assets in the world's key manufacturing locations, so clients get the same quality, compliance, control and visibility everywhere.

LOCAL SERVICE, GLOBAL REACH

Manufacturers face a “last mile” problem when arranging critical inland transportation for their goods. That’s where Morgan’s exclusive Global Drayage service—an industry first—can help you reach your global goals.

It’s easy enough to send components to an overseas factory by airfreight forwarder or ocean line. But handling requirements, tracking visibility and delivery coordination often break down when the shipment is tendered to one of thousands of local delivery companies at destination.

These same issues threaten to create failures in any complex manufacturing logistics program—whether your project is finished-goods distribution, warranty replacements, white-glove delivery, vendor-managed inventory (VMI) or some other transportation challenge.

Morgan award-winning drayage capabilities extend to the world’s major manufacturing centers. So you can rely on the Morgan team to deliver on even the toughest requirements, whether your goods are moving to Texas or Thailand.

Our network of dedicated and Morgan-managed assets stretches across North America and to manufacturing and distribution locations in Asia, Europe, Africa and Latin America.

Morgan’s Global Drayage network uses a single, real-time GPS tracking system for up-to-the-minute information on your goods’ whereabouts.

Our trucks and drivers conform to strict, uniform quality standards. So the Morgan staff handling your pickup in Penang have the exact same training and expertise as those who deliver in Dallas. The worldwide service is coordinated from end-to-end by our program managers in California—providing a single point-of-contact for all your needs.

Tell us about your own “last mile” challenges, and let Morgan put Supply On Demand® to work for you.
